French artist Louis Granet marked a turning point in his career by presenting his first solo exhibition at the Zidoun Bossuyt Gallery in Dubai this month.

The 33-year-old artist blends pop art, comic influences, and graphic art. His colorful and dynamic works capture the essence of a visual universe that is both playful and energetic.

are visible in his exhibition in Dubai titled “Nice To Meet You.”

Running until March 29, the artist took a bold and immersive approach by painting the entire gallery. The walls are covered in vibrant colors — green, blue, red, and pink — creating a visual dialogue with his canvases.

This initiative transforms the space into an extension of the works, offering visitors a complete sensory experience.

“For this exhibition, I wanted something very joyful, very floral, almost like a rainbow of colors. Something that feels good to me and to the people,” Granet explained to Arab News en Francaise.

“I took the theme of flowers, even though I work with flowers in an almost monstrous way. They are big flowers, masses of petals, tulips, and sunflowers,” he added.

Granet draws inspiration from what he sees around him, whether it’s flowers, vegetation, or everyday objects.

These elements come to life in his paintings, which he often captures in photographs before translating them into his own style.

His works, varying in size and oscillating between abstraction and figuration, reveal a visual universe where nature and daily life blend in a whirlwind of vibrant colors and dynamic shapes.

“I like things that are both very abstract and very figurative, very different, very varied,” he explained.
